We Corner People - A film about building a bridge in Nepal

Near Nepal's border with China sits a town that is beautiful, but oh so isolated. The inhabitants call themselves the "Corner People", living as they do with their backs up against a mountain wall without benefit of electricity, roads, or a single store.

The path out of town crosses a river that becomes a raging torrent during monsoon season. Everyone in town mourns the loss of at least one individual who slipped and drowned crossing this angry river.

Now the government has sent the materials to build a bridge and an engineer to oversee. All the work must be done by hand, by locals working together. But this town, like any town, is full of individuals who don't always see eye to eye. What makes this movie so compelling is that it takes the time to explore the many perspectives of the people who have to set their differences aside to get the job done.

The film will be introduced and questions taken by Karma and Wendy Lama of KarmaQuest Ecotourism and Adventure Travel, a Half Moon Bay company that organizes tours to Nepal and beyond the Himalaya that seek to benefit local communities and support conservation.

Donations for victims of the 2015 Nepal Earthquake will be accepted at the screening.
